Beach holidays became popular in the Victorian era and Bournemouth beach was no exception. By 1840, with Tregonwell's help, Bournemouth had become a small village and, with the development of the railway system in 1870, the population had increased and more visitors were able to come to the area.

Lewis Tregonwell is known as 'The Founder of Bournemouth'. A former Captain in the Dorset Yeomanry, he bought his wife, Henrietta on holiday to the area in the early 1800s. She loved it so much that she persuaded him to build a house there.
